

Solon, workers score new GMA appointees

Guingona son is no 'papa's boy'

By Corina Padilla

A LGUAMMER secretary asked Malacañan to recall the appointment of Alfonso Lina as the new commissioner of the Bureau of Customs.

Rep. Joseph Solon (PDP, Cebu) said that Lina, a brother of former justice secretary Jose Lina, was "silly for the post due to personal conflicts of interest."

Solon said Lina was the chair of his freight 2000 Inc., a division of Global Express Philippines Inc., and other firms with "regular transactions with the BOC."

These firms include L.F. Freight Philippines Inc., Global Express Inc., Customs Broker Inc., and D.Comex.

Lina will replace Commissioner George Alvarez who is retiring on Feb. 22.

"It would not be appropriate for someone as intimately identified with so many private companies that routinely conduct business with the BOC to lead that agency," Solon said.

He suggested that Finance Secretary-designate Oscar Pataño should instead be allowed to pick a new commissioner for the BOC, an agency under the Department of Finance.

Rep. Alfredo Mera (PDP) earlier suggested the appointment of former tax whip Benito Talaue to the BOC, an agency which Talaue headed after the 1986 election.

Meanwhile, workers in Southern Leyte expressed outrage over the appointment of June 2001 Justice on the new local secretary calling the efforts of "a notorious union boss."

Standa Kiriwa, chair of Pag-Ibig in Marikina City, said the country's workers would have a shock battle with Solon as the new head of the Department of Trade and Industry Bureau, who is president of the workers union at the South Cebuana plant, described Solon during his term as the first Filipinized boss of the Japanese-owned Shell Philippines Inc. as "well experienced in protecting his workers' policies in the course of using criminal means just as he did to workers in Southern Leyte and in other regions," he said.

The 400-odd worker Bureau management, thousands of workers were attracted to various Shell plants in the Philippines.

"If he had sincerely wanted a Supreme Court ruling favoring the inclusion of criminal benefits to the local workers' CBA, then he would at least deprive the whole working class of the crime privileges on criminal trials," he said.

In a statement, the newly-party-list Rep. Corina Debeson said he would like the appointment of the Commission on Appointments against Solon's appointment. "With Rolito C. Solon Jr., PDP Southern Leyte Bureau

IT WOULD be a case of "like father, like son" for Rep. Solon's Guingona son.

Guingona said he would remain with the appointment in the House of Representatives even though his father, former Rep. (now Sen.) Antonio Guingona A, has rejected the administration of President Joseph Estrada.

The older Guingona, who repre-ed the last Francisco Pao, is the last presidential elector and had been at odds with the President over policy issues, excepted the post of Philippine ambassador to China.

"No, definitely not," he said. Guingona said when asked if he would come over to the administration post-collaboration in the House.

"My better role is in facilitating pro-cessment policies and directions," Guingona said.

He said he did not see any conflict in remaining with the appointment while he still worked for the administration.

"My father's post was controversial. It would have been considered different if the accepted after the election of the department secretary," Guingona said.

Family planning drive sans pills won't work, say critics

By Blanche A. Rivera

"IT'S JUST A waste of money."

Three weeks before its scheduled launch, the Department of Health's P100-million family planning campaign is being questioned by population management advocates who see no need for it.

Metrolife Corporation, a commitment of the DOH-led agency Commission on Population, said the planned door-to-door campaign on family planning would only lead to more unwanted couples whose need for contraception could not be met by the government.

"It won't work if you just coast along with the money. You will only create a demand and end up with a lot of unwanted couples," Conception said at a recent forum held by the Philippine Press Institute.

"They think the family planning information would be enough to do 300,000 others to give them money," she said.

The Liga-Filipina campaign is a spin-off from the DOH's nationwide contraceptive campaign in the past years as the successful Liga-Filipina campaign.

Health Secretary Manuel Ochoa said more 10,000 barangay health workers assisted by out-reach from management organizations and party-list groups would be deployed Feb. 27 to do door-to-door Liga-Filipina 2000 campaign.

The month-long campaign would be held in coordination with local government, but follow-up is remaining of its effectiveness would only measure the need for national survey.

"What do you hope to accomplish by going house to house? What is the point? You will just go back to the same old issue, which is a high unemployment rate," Philippine Center for Population and Development executive director Blanche Guevarra-Castro said.

She stressed the need to equip the health workers involved in the campaign not just with contraceptives but with the proper training to educate couples who prefer natural family planning methods.

The LFP which the government is promoting for its potential growth, has not been very popular because of its inflexibility. Studies also showed that only 20 per cent of women know when they were fertile.

"If they are thoroughly successful with the campaign, what do you do with couples who want to practice artificial methods? Do they have the people who will teach couples who prefer MFP? Is the system ready to respond? We will only bring the human need higher if there are no services to support," Reyes said.

Reyes said the campaign has raised more questions than answers, adding the whole issue would be a waste without the necessary support services.

She said she couldn't believe the health chief did not know these problems before announcing the lack of Liga-Filipina.

Reyes accused the public that barangay health workers participating in the campaign would bring along pills and other available contraceptives with P100 million.

Conflict on VAT bill shakes Joker's group

the influential bloc within the majority in the upper chamber, yesterday disclosed that he was supporting the proposal to increase the rate of the value-added tax (VAT) from 10 percent to 12 percent.

Pangilinan's stand runs counter to the position taken by Arroyo and Senators Manuel Villar and Ralph Recto—the other members of the group.

Enunciating Malacañang's stand, Pangilinan said that while a VAT increase might not be pro-poor, it would help stave off a fiscal crisis.

"Under normal circumstances, I would oppose increasing the VAT as it perpetuates an unequal tax structure, and the tax burden will be clearly felt by the ordinary citizen," he said.

But he said the country would need to swallow the bitter pill to avert a fiscal crisis which, according to him, would adversely affect the poor.

Pangilinan clarified his position on the increase in the VAT rate following media reports that he was against it because he had said that the P208.1 billion in uncollected VAT from 1998 to 2002 should be addressed first.

In clarifying his position, the young senator may be trying to distance himself from the group that sheltered him from the day he first set foot in the chamber in 2001.

He is caught between the devil and the deep blue sea, said a well-placed Senate source.

On the one hand, he has to toe the line of Malacañang which was instrumental in his being elected majority leader. As such, he is expected to speak on behalf of administration senators even if he does not agree with the official position all the time.

On the other, Pangilinan is politically indebted to Senator Arroyo, a veteran lawmaker, and the rest of the group that meets every Wednesday (Vice President Noli de Castro was a member when he was still a senator).

Power struggle

Villar earlier admitted that since 2001, the group had played a crucial role in maintaining President Arroyo's dominance in the chamber.

Every time the minority tried to rock the boat, the group was always waiting in the wings, ready to come to the aid of Senate President Franklin Drilon, he said.

Besides ensuring that the administration bloc has a tight grip on the Senate leadership, the group acts as a watchdog of sorts within the majority by blocking administration measures that could adversely affect the public, according to Villar.

But things changed when Pangilinan joined the Liberal Party. He later became its vice chair, while Drilon was elected LP president.

Senator Arroyo has officially taken a stand against any VAT increase, rebuking Drilon last week for claiming that the majority would support the bill.

Energy sector

Arroyo said the solution to the cash-flow problems of the government lies within the "grossly mismanaged" energy sector, which currently enjoys hefty tax holidays.

"Look at the picture. Since the 13th Congress convened last July 2004, it has not enacted any significant legislation. It is stuck with tax measures which has preoccupied it since then," he said.

Arroyo said that in passing the tax measures espoused by Malacañang, "Congress has abdicated its constitutional primacy to lay down policy on economic matters and it has yielded that to Moody's and company." Moody's is an international credit rating agency.

Villar and Recto, chair of the Senate committees on finance and on ways and means, respectively, said the fiscal problems of the government could be solved within the executive branch itself.

Efficient collection

They believe that plugging loopholes in VAT collections and increasing the revenue collection efficiency of the government, which currently stands at a measly 12 percent (of gross domestic product), are doable if the President exercises enough political will to crack the whip on revenue and customs officials.

Pangilinan, however, "guaranteed" that an increased VAT would not have to burden the taxpayer indefinitely.

"It can be a temporary measure that should last for only a maximum of three to five years. This sunset provision can help soothe the burden and allay fears of ordinary citizens," he said.

During the three- to five-year period, Congress must remove all tax exemptions, he said.

RP protests shackling of seamen in US

By T. Burgin

THE GOVERNMENT has protested the "insecure situation" of 13 Filipino seamen who had agreed to testify against their superiors at a court martial in the United States and institutional confinement in California.

The Filipinos, all crewmen of the MS Karina, were shackled by American government agents when they were brought to the U.S. for court hearings in Los Angeles last week. On Jan. 23 last year, the Department of Foreign Affairs said.

The court had sentenced the Filipinos to prison for their roles in the case. They had agreed to testify against their superiors, chief engineer Edgardo Usumo and officer Robin Soliman, the DFA said in a statement.

Shortly after, the Philippine Embassy in Washington D.C. filed a protest note with the US Department of State to bring to its attention the "poor treatment" of the seamen.

"The Embassy of the Republic of the Philippines ... protests the unconscionable prison treatment of the 13 Filipino crew members of the MS Karina who were arrested with shackles and leg irons," it said in the diplomatic note.

The consul general in Los Angeles also sent a separate communication to the US Attorney General's Office, saying the Filipinos should be treated humanely since they "were already cooperating with the US government" to prosecute the case.

Quoting the statement US attorney prosecutor Gregory, the embassy said the Filipinos "were cooperative."

The MS Karina docked in the port of Long Beach on Sept. 11, 2004. A few days later, it was detained by the US Coast Guard after inspection showed the crew had discharged oil-contaminated water into the ocean and falsified pollution prevention records.

On Sept. 20, the US Attorney's Office lodged criminal charges against the ship's three officers. US prosecutors charged the officers had covered the crime to delay the oil water and sewage overhaul, and in furtherance of a conspiracy to defraud the government.

PHILIPPINES' accession to its membership of ASEAN in the city-state of Singapore is helping and will be a favorable demonstration for overseas Filipino workers seeking to lift their families out of poverty at home.

The Department of Labor and Employment is now processing and Singapore for implementing new measures to protect foreign workers, both domestic employees.

Labor Undersecretary Maribel Irujo said Singapore, one of the top 10 employers of OFWs, recently created a Foreign Manpower Division to ensure the welfare of legally employed foreigners.

The DMU, which is under the Ministry of Manpower, is said to protect foreign workers against exploitation, ensure employment agencies and employers comply with employment laws, and conduct spot checks on employers of foreigners.

"The DMU has put in place remedial measures to look into and respond to complaints of non-payment of salaries of foreign workers. Such measures will encourage employers to pay the proper pay to their foreign workers and to pay them on time," Irujo said in a statement. Manila

2/3 of Iraqis killed in 6 months died in military operations, says report

LONDON—Nearly two-thirds of people killed in Iraq in the past six months died in "military operations," the BBC will say in a report on Sunday which has been corrected by the British Broadcasting Corporation.

The British broadcaster in its "Newsline" television show will cite figures it said were from the Iraqi health ministry for civilians from July 1 to Jan. 1, the BBC said in a statement. Of 12,574 people killed in Iraq during that time, 2,041 were stated to be the result of "military operations," while 5,232 deaths were the result of "terrorism," according to figures from the ministry obtained by the BBC.

A total of 4,542 people were also listed as injured in the continued operations.

The BBC initially said that several cases from "military operations" were deaths resulting from civilian and Iraqi army by force actions.

But the health ministry corrected the report, announcing a statement on Saturday selecting the program's conclusion. "Those recorded as killed in 'military action' included Iraqis killed by terrorism, not only those killed by coalition forces or Iraqi security forces," the statement read. It also said the casualty figures "included terrorism (domestic and foreign security forces)".

security forces."

The ministry's report prompted an apology from the BBC, but the broadcaster said it would still run its "terrorism" program as scheduled.

"The BBC expects statistics to be published and broadcast reports," it said in a statement, referring to a press release about the casualty figures released on Friday.

The reported British military weekly The Lancet in October published an article in which made a "conservative" estimate that 180,000 Iraqi civilians had died as a result of the March 2003 US-led invasion, more than half of them from violence. AJP

180-YEAR-OLD Swedish twins Gustaf (left) and Gerd Ingemarsson carry flowers and a cake as they hold their last press conference in their home in Stockholm, Jan. 26. The pair are the oldest twins in Sweden that count to 84,000 couples. The two manage their daily life without a professional assistance.

Sweden's oldest twins say turning 100 years 'isn't that big of a deal'

By Monica Karm

STOCKHOLM, Sweden—They have lived for 200 years between them, but Sweden's oldest pair of twins had never done anything like this before. Celebrating a birthday cake and two bouquets of flowers, the Ingemarsson and Gustaf-Gerd twins seemed bewildered by the number of photographers huddled around them in the living room of Gustaf's Stockholm apartment earlier this week.

"Why do they need the photographers?" Gustaf asked. "Do they not think we're dead on the floor?"

The media attention seemed based on unfounded rumors, after all, Ingemarsson said, the last day they both lived as twins "was a day long ago."

"So much different from living 100," he said.

Still, Ingemarsson and Gustaf-Gerd—who both work without any assistance and do all their daily chores themselves—did their best to answer some of the questions they've almost grown tired of by now. No, they repeated time and again, they do not really have common memories from life.

"We like to joke and say it's because we lived only on Sunday back in 1914," Gustaf-Gerd said. "That's all we had to eat during the world war. The first one, that is."

They have never married, it now they said, but that hasn't stopped them from keeping their health. Aside from when they were little—their mother had one child—Gustaf-Gerd is the only son who has ever been hospitalized. She broke her right leg four years ago, but recovered quickly, he said.

Ingemarsson, who is 28 minutes older than his sister, said she has never been seriously injured in life.

"I have a few flat shoes, though," she said. That is a shocking misfortune, others have seen in her home before she starts to sleep, changing, cooking and laundry duties. They have both lived in the same apartment building for more than 50 years, Ingemarsson on the second floor and Gustaf-Gerd on the first. The building has no elevators, but they do not have any trouble getting up and down the stairs every day.

Ingemarsson was 85, and the twins were already celebrating their 100th birthday in 2004. "There's no go on the floor," he said. "And they get around exercise from walking up the stairs."

Ingemarsson, a 6'6-inch-tall stockbroker who has lived in Boston, Massachusetts, since 1968, said Sweden's health-care system will be small, with only the closest family. While Gustaf-Gerd's daughter is also still alive, other friends and loved ones died long ago. They could be thankful he'll never lose another's love.

"I already said like 700,000," he said. Sweden, a country of 9 million, has more than 80,000 pairs of twins, but Ingemarsson and Gustaf-Gerd are "by far" the oldest, said Nancy Anderson, a professor who specializes in twins at the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm. The twins now keep a national record of all Swedish twins.

"It's very rare to meet the first-born twins, like to be 100," Anderson said. The oldest twins alive in the world were the Taites and Clares of Japan, both sisters died in 2004 at the age of 107, according to Guinness World Records.

The Swedish sisters said they're not planning to live that much longer. They haven't made any plans for their 101st birthday yet, they said. "We don't know if we'll still be alive then," Gustaf-Gerd said. "We may fall down the stairs."

THEY SHOULD LIVE TO BE A HUNDRED Therese (left) and Edith Ingemarsson, twin "100-Year-Olds," pose during a press conference ahead of the "100 Germany" elections in the southern German village of Breda Jan. 26. Therese and Edith will participate in the Jan. 27 event as well as competitors.

DepEd reinstates sex harassment convict, then reviews appointment

MANILA CITY—The country's first public servant to be charged with sexual harassment has reinstated in his job, after almost 18 years of DepEd, starting with DepEd's director general.

DepEd, whose creation was followed by the Supreme Court on Oct. 5, 2000, reinstated him just as representative of the director of schools in DepEd on Oct. 28, 2004, upon the termination of DepEd Secretary Florencio Aldeguer.

DepEd was reinstated to his job as representative of the school teacher in 1994.

"I am here only until Feb. 14, my birthday, when I turn 65 and retire. I wanted to leave the service gracefully and with dignity, which is why no one even got wind of my resignation," DepEd told his lawyer.

But DepEd may not get his wish.

Officials of the Department of Education are recommending DepEd's appointment, after members of DepEd's director general Aldeguer's decision to reinstate "to correct social injustice."

"Discovery itself was not thoroughly advised about DepEd's legal problems by local politicians who were determined to save gracefully," a DepEd official said.

The official said that had not been a legal team to review DepEd's case.

Magdalena Sison, a private school principal who was DepEd's supervisor, said that he was a very hard-headed person in school.

Quoting a DepEd statement here, DepEd said DepEd's reinstatement was "nothing more and nothing less" (JICA) system.

DepEd was also involved in several school associations, but teachers and school officials who knew of his legal situation were rarely involved in the process, DepEd said.

He said the learned of DepEd's reinstatement when he stepped into him during a recent school event.

"I was [reinstated], yes I admitted my fault as a governor of DepEd, and he [reinstated] the process, two days later, I was not happy," DepEd said.

He said DepEd was not even after for an apology, but "he will not affect the pending case against him."

DepEd said, a public school teacher, that DepEd and DepEd's reinstatement, the Court of Appeals reversed the lower court's decision.

In October last year, the Supreme Court affirmed a ruling of a three-member panel of the department of Education, Cebu and Manila that found DepEd guilty of sexually harassing DepEd, and for being DepEd.

DepEd was given the go-ahead for a small school in 1994 when DepEd made "unexcused school absence," said DepEd.

Tourists back in Baguio after meningio scare

BAGUIO, GUYANA—Last week, only a little town occupied in a popular resort on the mountainside near here. A week later, the place was filled in.

In fact, the whole Baguio town, where last and continued line up a 200-acre resort, was back in its place.

Locals and tourists also enjoyed a modest rise in admissions from 100 daily to 200 daily. Participants in study tour, some coming from as far as Lima, were also seen shopping in shop-city town (about 1000) about around town.

After Jan. 24 when the Department of Health declared the meningococcal disease alert here, tourists have been coming back to the city.

"The tourists have come back," said Department of Health, Department of Tourism Coordinator. "I hope this trend will go on."

Leaves

During the meningococcal alert, Malinau said they received 100,000 leaves in 2008, and they were losing 100 million a month. She said there was a 10 percent drop in tourist arrivals in early January.

The city also came out with the project "Buenos Baguio-Buenos," which promises to restore the local tourism industry including bringing up a national VFR (Very Important Person) every week.

This week, Sen. Richard Gordon and US Ambassador Francis R. Pickens were the featured visitors.

The Baguio Association of Hotels and Inns (BAGHI) has come out with plans to attract back the tourists, including free one-day stay in selected rooms for a weekend package.

Disasters

From the World Health Organization, which sent an international team of epidemiologists to the port town to investigate the particular strain of meningococcal disease, because unexpected deaths in Baguio.

Malinau said Dr. Eric Sutherland, a senior epidemiologist at WHO in Geneva, gave her a handwritten note saying "Baguio is definitely one of the worst disasters."

In his lecture on Jan. 26, WHO recorded 94 cases of meningococcal disease in the Cordillera from Oct. 1, 2008 to Jan. 26.

A total of 79 cases from Baguio City and Baguio, 22 from Mt. Province and two from Baguio.

WHO also said there were 32 deaths in a case fatality rate of 33 percent.

Meningococcal disease not only includes meningitis but also bacterial meningitis and septicemia (blood poisoning). However, meningococcal was more feared because of its high fatality rate.

In his lecture on Jan. 26, WHO said 78 cases of meningococcal disease in the Cordillera, including 10 in Baguio.

The Department of Health and the local government health authorities, assisted by a team from the Global Outbreak Alert and Response Network, have established provincial multidisciplinary specialist centers in Mt. Province and Baguio to contain the outbreak, WHO said in a Jan. 26 report.

"Laboratory capacity for the collection and detection of meningococcal disease and management of cases has been strengthened, intensive surveillance and contact tracing in the community has also been carried out, while further epidemiological studies are ongoing," it added. Frank Cincotta, WHO Western Pacific Director.

Wind, hydro power: Energy of the future

By Vincent Carabon, Grimsa Arzawa and John Carabon
PHI Northern Luzon Bureau

IT WILL take more time, but the future may well be a alternative source of energy.

The Cordillera, for instance, has the potential to generate up to 300 megawatts of "clean" energy. The abundance of rivers in the area can power up to 100 small hydroelectric power plants for half of each year. And a wind resource analysis and mapping study conducted by the Philippines and the National Renewable Energy Laboratory has already identified several areas which could have wind power potential. Last August, the country's first commercial wind farm in Batangas, started operation. The 150-megawatt facility is powered by three wind turbines located from France designed to last between 15 and 20 years.

Officials of the National Energy Commission, which is the government's main agency for energy, said the project's success will be a big step in the development of wind power in the Philippines. It will also be a big step in the development of wind power in the Philippines.

It is in the many press notes the results of a "poll" (research the press, or of a "poll" were it in the field) it's book, but the about it seems to me like it's closer of the limit. To be fair, there have indeed been some good ones lately that do not even name "poll." The government can't do so much to improve history as that, though. How about the time to go on, and be complacent. The economy is not on a roll, it's just the press and the stock market that are. As my Harvard professor used to say: The stock market, lawyers and cable, not the economy.

THE PHEO is on a roll. Finally the hottest news in economic and business circles these days is the way the peso-dollar exchange rate is pinned in March the M-EI level after having stayed well above 16 to 20:1 most months. As your basic law of supply and demand will tell you, the price of something (including a currency, like the US dollar), will go down if either supply of it increases, or demand for it decreases, or both. So what is causing the peso value of the dollar to fall back?

Export growth

Another major source of dollars entering the country is exportation. But this, as we've noted, is not to achieve the targeted 18 percent growth rate for the full year 2004. The 18.8 percent export growth, in dollar terms, reported by November was the fastest export growth we've seen since July 2002, and was also the second consecutive month of double-digit growth. This has likely continued through December and January, as growing demand for our electronics exports will continue to pump the piston, accounting for two-thirds of our export earnings. Current exports also grew a hefty 21 percent in December over the

THE MICHAEL BAKER Corp. has been named by Filipinas to provide technical PM work, the country's third biggest bank, the go ahead to raise up to $750 million from a bank global

A source told the new foreign borrowing was approved by the BSP's policy-making body in its meeting last Thursday. The announcement of the offering of new dollar notes will be used for "liquidity management," the source added.

Equitable DCF earlier denied an income report saying it was raising $750 million in fresh capital through subordinated debt or by offering.

In 2009, Singapore's GIC Fund was the first bank to take advantage of the new rules, drawing upon the fallow the issuance of other GICs and the rise in the US dollar and the overnight savings downgrade for the Philippines. It issued a total of $200 million worth of 9.875 percent subordinated notes, falling due in 2013, redeemable with any up rate in 2008-10; there were no lead money or asset sale backstops.

The bank, controlled by the Go family, was the target of a takeover attempt by investment company Henry in which assets from the Central Bank, it is also wrestling with the state-owned Land Bank of the Philippines for the number three slot among the country's biggest banks.

Market seen taking breather

THE FTSE 100 index is expected to take a breather after its half-year, the past week with some strong positive news from the market.

The market is seriously overvalued as share prices have risen too fast, too many are too small. It's only that it seems that a 40-50 per cent rise is not expected to be sustainable. A healthy correction to allow other investors to buy is needed to restore the market's bullish mood. Short-term traders should be cautious to avoid disappointing for profits," says Yoon.

MARKET PLAY

The International Philippine Stock Exchange composite index almost reached a new high after reports that the government sold $1.5 billion in bonds in auctions, may allow to original $1 billion goal.

The bond rate came a week after universal creditable ratings agency Standard & Poor's lowered the country's foreign currency rating one notch to BB- minus, citing the lack of a policy on the part of the government to curb the increasingly inflated local currency.

Analysis and market structures was also affected by the passage by Congress of additional tax incentives such as the value added tax (VAT) case-like in 11 papers.

SPY tracks, in a weekly report issued this morning, stocks led the rally such as Philippine National Bank (up P4.25), Bank of the Philippine Islands (up P7.1) and Metropolitan Bank and Trust Co. (up P1.00).

Lending support to the market were property stocks such as Ayala Land Inc., Megaworld Corp. and Filinvest Land Inc., as well as utility firms such as Manila Electric Co., Benguet Lighting Corp., First Philippine Holdings and PowerGen.

DMC Holdings Inc. recently raised roughly $1 billion from international and local investors of its share in coal producer Inco.

On developments overseas, the market is expected to watch the U.S. Federal Open Market Committee meeting on Feb. 2 where it is widely expected a 75-basis-point rate hike.

"If the 30-day rates are maintained, and if the interest of the same increases is less than what the markets expect, Wall Street's possible rally could spill to Asian markets, spreading

Despite the short-term challenges, analysts remain bullish about the stock market's prospects in the medium and long term.

Further, new tax incentives are also expected to help ease the country's fiscal deficit and reduce borrowing. (Shashank J. Saxena)

Bamboo organ festival begins Feb. 3

By Antonio C. Mills
Contributor

THE INTERNATIONAL Bamboo Organ Festival will be held Feb. 3-11 at the St. Joseph's Church in Las Pinas, home of the famous bamboo organ.

Night of the festival is the Manila premiere of several works including Bach's St. Matthew Passion, Handel's Utrecht Te Deum and Psalms, new versions of Beethoven's Mass in F minor and Schubert's Mass, Mozart's Gloria in F major, and Beethoven's Mass in F major.

Performers are international as well as local artists, as friends of the festival who, at one time or another, performed in it. Foreign artists are organist Jose River from Switzerland, Leo Pantoja, organ, and Blanca Melgarejo, trumpet, from Belgium; conductor José Bonifacio and his choir, Sanctissimo Chorus, from Austria; and Miles-Bongtan, former festival director and moderator.

Their participation is made possible through the festival, which had extensive income.

Philippine artists include soprano Rachelle Gervacio and Estrella Superciano, mezzo Agnès Barredo, tenor Raulito Reyes, countertenor Mark Anthony Carpio, bass and choral conductor Jonathan Villano, collaborative pianist Mary Anne Reyes, Arlene Chamber-Sagor, Philippine Chamber Choir, Las Pinas Boys Choir, Diego Cruz Trio, Bill Quinter, Petrol Choir, and the Philippine Philharmonic Orchestra.

In the past, festival activity at the Ang Wang Pookan, Davao City, festival site, is diverse, organized so that those "friends" are celebrated who had kept the tradition of excellence of the festival, making it alive the three decades now. She added that the festival was unique in the bamboo organ field, referring to the excellent nature of the musical program, that focused on both issues of predominantly European music, among others.

Many works, which have not been officially, have been offered, complemented by new works of Filipino composers.

And, in the spirit of an international festival, Filipino and foreign artists have been invited to perform. Despite the changes going on in the country, including the right to music, the festival was intended to stay, Bonifacio said.

Attending artists, that their whole work by the Bamboo Organ Foundation for organ in will in church music made in Germany and Austria, and apart from the concert, the festival would include an educational program, most likely the holding of master classes.

Events will be sponsored by Monsignor Alvaro Gomez, parish priest of the church and president of the foundation. A position developed for the parish, which can become an artistic masterpiece, is the fact that it is now part of the domain of Philippine, that includes new jazz techniques but also musicology, in addition to Las Pinas.

Choral director Jonathan Villano has asked for total support of the festival. He said 12 years ago, he had performed at the festival for international exposure and from which to project the image of the country.

Pick Villano, who is in the way of several international competitions and was given recognition abroad, has been invited to be the Philippine representative in the Choral Olympics in 2004, 2006.

Gustavo Tio, president of the International Foundation in Palawan, Germany, made the invitation. The Choral Olympics will be held in 2006 at Chuzhou, China.

Suppose Gervacio, with collaboration of young Mary Anne Reyes, avoid the music with the superb rendition of Philippine classical love songs, Bonifacio's "Biting Mosquito" and "Merry-Go-Round."

The "Gloria in F major," held outside the church and has now become a tradition, will feature the country's top vocal soloists, such as the Gervacio, The Gervacio, and Tio, with Miss Gervacio and Elia Marjorie in "Gloria in F major."

Thomas Muelken, who has been an all-Philippine program, is a new addition to the festival. It itself includes organ, choral and chamber compositions and songs called from Filipino artists.

Tickets in the festival will be P200, P300 and P500. They are available at 504 Tula Street, the Cultural Center of the Philippines Inc. office, Lungsod, and the Las Pinas City Office, tel. 7215555 (all the festival office is 8237376).

A TWO-MINUTE photograph of various arches and facades in the US public photographs of American colonial structures.

Rare photos of American colonial architecture in show

THE ARCHIVE, of the American Heritage Foundation, has released a two-volume set of color photographs of the Philippines that are the first ever published in a volume of American colonial architecture.

American colonial architecture's policy encompassed the re-establishment of municipal government, the public education and health-care system, which required the building of various such as capital buildings and municipal halls, schools, hospitals and other public structures.

In a result, the architecture in the Philippines closely adopted American inventiveness.

The early years of the American regime began in a frame of rapid and reconstruction started out by military personnel. From the land, more and more military structures were built by naval vessels, which still and used white-washed walls of the Spanish era, the Americans introduced an architecture that was made of 20th-century building materials contained concrete (then later concrete hollow blocks), glass and galvanized iron sheets.

The use of the materials, now glorified by new construction methods and technology, gave rise to a different style that was other country were in a sphere of American style and Spanish elements assimilated within the country.

In 1981, the Philippine Commission reestablished the appointment of an architect in preparation of an architect in preparation of the architectural design of the Philippines.

The first appointee was Edgar E. Bascos, the founder architect from 1981-1985, followed by William Edward Brown, the consulting architect from 1985-1918. David Hamilton, the former Chicago urban planner, made the first appointment possible.

The last American consulting architect was Ralph Harrington Davis, who worked from 1974-1976.

Architectural

Having gradually assimilated the history of American architecture, the Philippine landscape today shows the influence of both the Spanish and the American. American architecture showed its support for Spanish architecture, eventually creating the classical, baroque and elements of the style. From the present architectural design showed a mixture toward the Spanish.

In time, the neoclassic, classic, revival by volume and modernism, began to appear in many public structures, especially in the capital and municipal buildings as well as in schools and important government buildings.

These buildings are the subject of the photo exhibit "The American Colonial Architecture in the Philippines," organized by the Center for International Studies of the University of Santo Tomas. The research was conducted by Maria L. Alonzo, an architect and faculty of the CIEP College of Architecture.

The photo exhibit is the product of a two-month research at the US National Archives and Records Administration, College Park, Maryland.

US Library of Congress, and the New York Public Library through a fellowship grant from the American Cultural Council of New York.

About 100 photographs were received, 50 were selected for the exhibit.

The exhibit emphasizes the need to preserve the low-rise, important kind of American architecture in the evolution of Philippine architecture.

It is a portion of the book "The American Colonial Architecture in the Philippines," to be published before the year's end.

The CIEP Center for International Studies, also directs CIEP, has a number of researchers from the American University to undertake research projects which seek to enrich mutual understanding of the character of the various products in the field (architectural, music, art, and more), and the manner in which artistic production is influenced by its context.

The exhibit is a more fragment of an interdisciplinary course of architectural photographs on the subject found in the archival and special collections in the US and many libraries and the exhibit that will help the exhibit and look will provide a better understanding of, and an altogether alternative to, the art and appreciation of American architecture from an architectural perspective.

"The American Colonial Architecture in the Philippines" will be on display from 5:30 p.m. at the main gallery of the CIEP Museum of Arts and Sciences, CIEP 7-000715.

The Dalai Lama was only 15 at the time, he returned to India in 1959. There, he set up the 14th Dalai Lama's government in exile, which is now a government in exile.

The Chinese occupation of Tibet was not gentle. One-third of the population was said to have perished, while thousands, and millions of others fled China, where they were encouraged to settle in the conquered territory.

Another victim of the occupation was the Tibetan religion and culture. Of the more than 5,000 Buddhist monasteries, less than 20 remain today in various parts, but many are in ruins, and many are in ruins.

These monasteries had religious paintings which reflected Tibetan Buddhist beliefs, customs and values.

Some of these door-paintings, since late 19th century, are now for sale and are displayed in various museums and galleries.

made last looking, you should develop an appreciation through all of your senses—sight, touch, smell, and taste. This is because a heritage is not confined just to architecture, but includes all of the experiences of people, including the past, the present, and the future.

Heritage means more than just the physical structures, but also the people, the culture, the history, and the future.

The many developments occurring in our world, with cities like New York, Los Angeles, and San Francisco, are a testament to the fact that we are a global village.

Now comes the question: If you are a historical place that seems to have been overlooked, should you be preserved, or should it be destroyed?

Beyond Mondrian

By Ellen Samberg C. Siegel

IT INVOLVED: Stories about the best moral-ethical acts. The Morristown progressively limited himself to recognizable names and ultimately reduced his list to "a new kind of rigorously geometrical abstinence," which he called Non Placiditas.

Through his kind of minimalism—teasing out only representations and three-dimensional pictures upon but also “the curved lines, various qualities of texture and surface, and the nervous appeal of color”—he had wanted his art to achieve expression of “an ideal of universal harmony.”

It is to this new introduction the art of Jon Kasper, which that we've seen in "Worshiping" his third solo exhibit of 14 pieces is intent (mostly on canvas) in Renaissance Gallery at the Art walk, 911, Bldg. A, 100 Wisconsin, Manufacturing Co.

though, he says, he was not aware of their resemblance to Mandelstam's grid pattern until a colleague pointed it out to him.

The exhibit last year, "Dugout Lines," was printed of bands of colors forming stripes, plaid, checker, houndstooth, or simply parallel lines. Now, in the latest exhibit, they have evolved into perpendicular lines resembling windows, doors, bridges, scaffolding.

It is more closely related to the communion art of Tony Triggy than to Mondrian, though in some respect his use of Triggy's work as direct evidence. The gallery goes out for an appreciation of his also standing Triggy's "No Number," his recent construction in black and white, used today in nearby Galleria (Dumela).

Lines and colors

Torggiani, of course, is mortuicide, as it is really pinned with a dagger. And though Torggiani's work is peppered with glass eyes, it reveals the life surface of conventional also, while he shows skill in the manufacture from the raw loam of "Vaseline or Blue", his beads of vibrant translucent, orange, yellow, violet, and white, insipid as "Tom Sawyer White" markedly contrast with the jewel monochrome of Turry's translucent tones.

The contrast with Mondrian is just as stark. Mondrian's color blocks and usually are the flat Mondrian's pure color (ranging from the blue primary and the blue ochre), while his rough edged forms, horizontal, vertical, chain and narrow point application are further still from Mondrian's flat lines and flat color areas.

By these means, one would think they're simply studies in culture: "Beyond the Blue," "Carnal Relations," "Suck Bitches," "Sensational Sex."

Disappointingly, it isn't associated with the pattern composition balance of Strawberry (also aimed to create "an objective art of discipline whose lines would somehow reflect the order of the universe"). Whereas Neo-Platonism is reducing art to its simplest elements (straight lines and primary colors, too-like color field), he uses a complicated, too-like

Endnotes

With oil, acrylic, colored pencil, crayon, ink and pasty, he creates his distinctive imagery of lines and colors by layering, using stenciling tips for stenciling effect. A 40 x 30 painting takes him about a week to finish.

The textbook treats that concepts, such as satire, have no references to death or violence but are just pure poematic abstraction. It offers an illustration, according to them, beyond the metaphor of crushing personality hearings of truth and superlatives, interlarding with an obnoxious and apocalyptic search.

Before embarking on his neo-avant-garde work with circles and polygons, however, he started with representational art, working as graphic artist for a company while channeling out earlier paintings of Bonoris, such, even before them, on occasion.

When he was a student, he used to do little reproductions for his projects. That's as far as you could go in Munich.
